Doing Business with Asia's Other Billion

Our readers don't just read the NBR – they use it!

The NBR is a business tool used to make critical decisions and to guide companies, which means that our readers are deeply engaged with our content. They are part of a network dedicated to doing business intelligently, and are exactly the people our advertisers are trying to reach.

Feature description:

The non-Chinese part of Asia, also excluding India and Pakistan, is home to a billion people and an emerging middle class in the hundreds of millions outside Japan and Singapore. Indonesia alone has 40 million consumer who typically buy the most imports. Taken together, these nations actually account for more two-way trade with New Zealand than China or Australia at a value of $22 billion. They range from mature economies such as Japan to those among world's fastest growing, such as Indonesia and the Philippines. Many are covered by bilateral free trade agreements (Malaysia, Thailand) or multilateral ones (the Asean nations). Others are in the pipeline (South Korea).

This NBR special feature will explore all facets of doing business with all these Asian markets and offer practical advice:

- Going to market – How to identify the best locations and consumers in Asia's widespread geography and populations.
- Meeting consumer demands – Rising incomes are increasing the size of the middle class and their aspirations for goods and services. A wide range of New Zealand-based companies are looking for these opportunities.
- Protecting your interests – How to understand the business environment, control intellectual property, handle finances and maintain business contracts.
- Building relationships and dealing with authority – Essential detail whether it's finding partners for joint ventures, avoiding the pitfalls that foreign companies can face or working in an unfamiliar regulated and licensed environment.
